

THE TIMES OF INDIA

SATURDAY OCTOBER 6, 2007

Cardinal points

Vastu is a science to make you live with nature - but, the results of Vastu do not manifest immediately. It takes a long time, but often, problems can be cured just by making small changes. However, as effecting changes is not possible every time, sometimes because of cost factors and sometimes because of some other practical problems, one should find some innovative ways to resolve the problems.

In this context, the case of a family facing problems in progeny is pertinent. The family was living in Shahdara for the past forty years. The shape of their house plot is rectangular and entry is from south south-east (SSE). The lady of the house had three miscarriages and an abortion, and till last year, the couple was still childless.

The main concern of the couple was to have a baby.

There was an old, disused septic tank in the north-east (NE) point. A suggestion was made to remove that tank. Upon further inspection, a flight of stairs were seen in the NE - the NE point also had the highest elevation in the house. The tank which was situated there did not in fact belong to the family. Eight years ago, the father of the gentleman, and his uncle, divided the plot, leaving the septic tank of his uncle still in their area. It was easy to remove that tank but almost impossible to remove stairs, because they were built into the main building framework.

Further, their bedroom was situated in the north-west (NW) zone, which again indicated towards problems of miscarriages. It was not possible to change the status of their bedroom. Fortunately, the gentleman revealed that his in-laws had just constructed a new house which was made as per Vastu norms. Then it was suggested to him to send his wife to his in-laws house and keep her there until the next delivery.

Accordingly, the gentleman sent his wife to his in-laws house and his wife was allotted a south west room. This incident took place an year ago — last week, the gentleman confided that after eight years of their marriage they were finally blest with a healthy son. This is the impact of Vastu. If you are living with natural forces all your wishes can come true but if you are against them, you cant get anything.

Alkesh Gupta